Cost Basis Disposal Method

Cost basis disposal method choices only apply to NFS accounts.

When an equity or option is sold, shares are depleted using the cost basis disposal method for the account. If you have converted a mutual fund position from average cost to specific ID, then the account's cost basis disposal method will be used when redeeming that position. The account's cost basis disposal method is also used for redeeming any remaining unspecified shares on a specific share order.

Your cost basis disposal method choice will be applied to all positions in your account unless a different selection is made when a security is purchased. The only disposal method allowed on retirement accounts is FIFO. Non-retirement accounts default to FIFO unless another method is chosen.

Please consult a tax advisor before selecting a tax lot disposition method. Ameritas Investment Company, LLC (AIC) / Ameritas Advisory Services, LLC (AAS) may not provide tax advice, and accordingly, you are solely responsible for the tax effect of any selected method and change from or to a new method, for federal, state, local and foreign tax purposes. Please contact your registered representative to change a selection. AIC/AAS reserves the right to introduce new tax lot disposition methods at any time or to make any change in the offered tax lot disposition methods that is required by applicable law or regulations, without prior notice.
